

The Charisma Diagnostic

Results & Recommendations

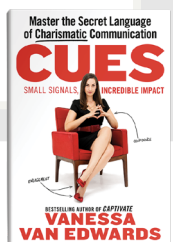

The Science of Charisma

What makes someone charismatic?

In a groundbreaking study from Princeton University, researchers found that highly charismatic, likable, compelling people demonstrate a special blend of two specific traits: warmth and competence.

According to the research, warmth and competence cues account for 82 percent of our impressions of others.

And here's the good news: Anyone can communicate with more charisma by learning to be use the right mix of warm and competent cues.

The Charisma Gap

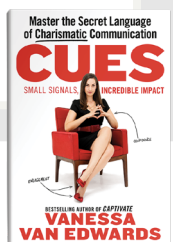

But here's the problem: Most of us have an imbalance between warmth and competence. It's often the hidden cause of our social difficulties, missed potential, and miscommunications.

We need a balance of warmth and competence cues to succeed.

Communicators that use too many warm cues can be seen as trustworthy but not always responsible. The desire to be liked can get in the way of setting boundaries and perceived confidence.

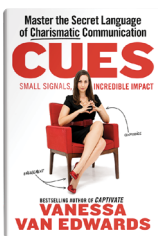

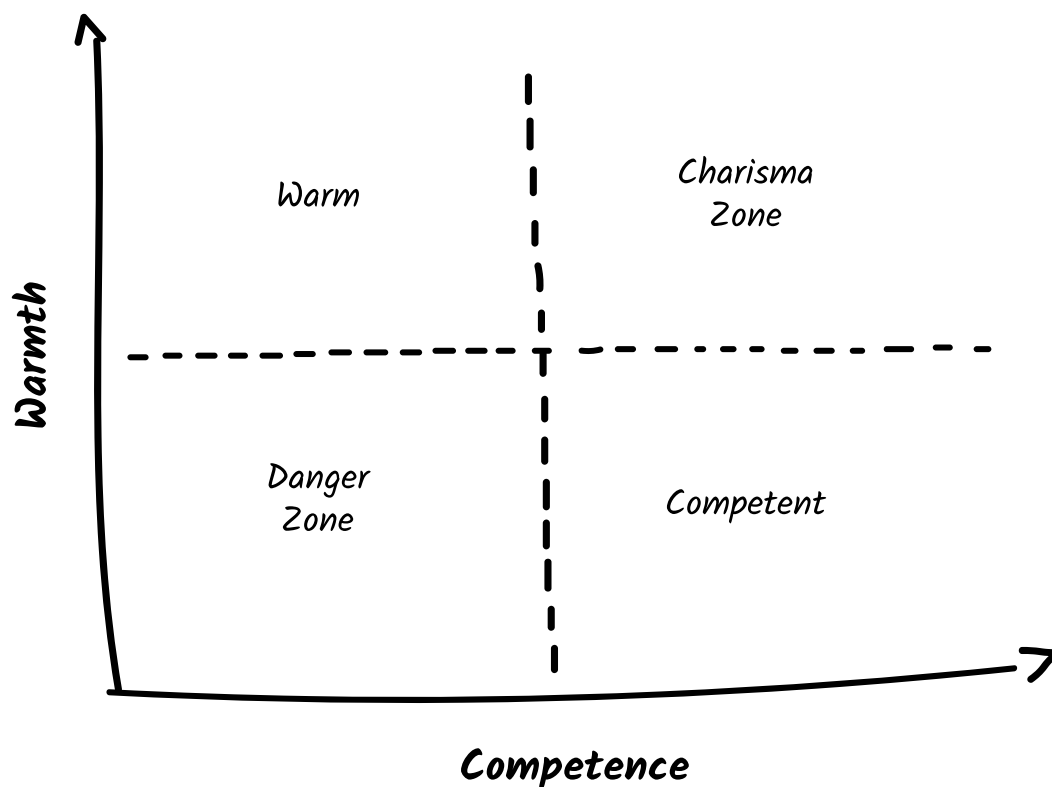

Communicators that use too many competent cues can be seen as smart but not always approachable. The desire to be productive and get things done can take a toll on relationships and ability to connect.

Cues: Master the Secret Language of Charismatic Communication teaches a step-by-step framework for communicating with charisma. And it all starts with the Charisma Scale.

The Charisma Scale

The Charisma scale is a model to gauge how warm and competent we are. Let's walk through each area of the Charisma Scale to understand each quadrant's strengths, struggles, and goals.

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

The Charisma Zone

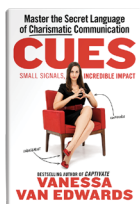

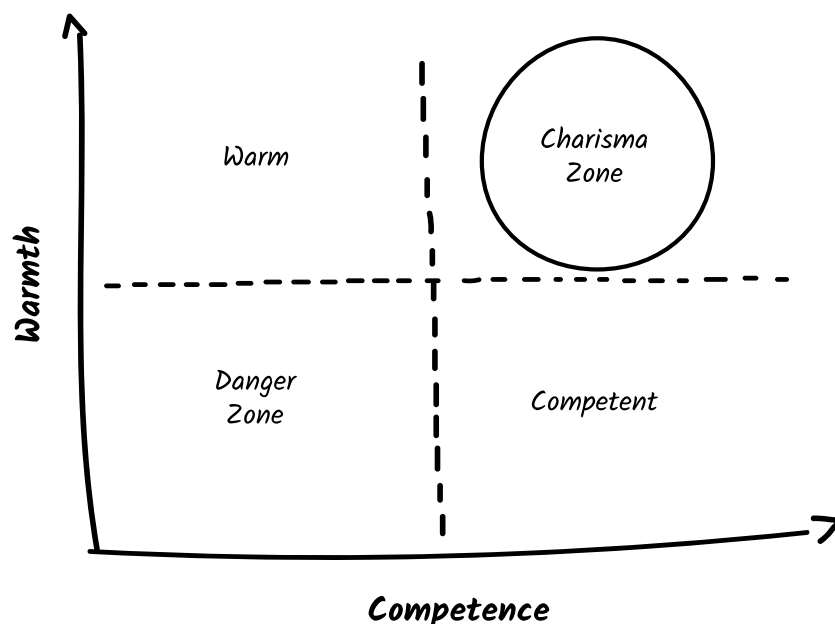

People who communicate with both warmth and competence fall into the upper right quadrant of the Charisma Scale. This is the ideal zone. Great job!

Highly charismatic people immediately signal trust and credibility by using a balance of warm and competent communication cues. We see them as friendly and smart, impressive and collaborative.

Strengths: Highly charismatic people are both effective and approachable. They are great team leaders and communicators.

Struggles: Highly charismatic people are often sought after and in-demand. They might struggle to balance all the opportunities they have.

Goal: Maintain a balance between high warmth and high competence in every interaction.

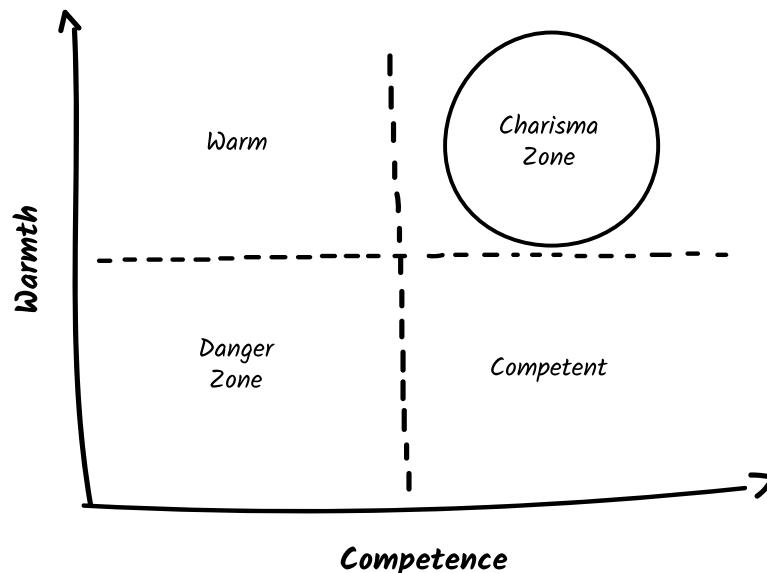

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

Charisma at Work

Strengths of highly charismatic communicators:

- Relationships. They strive to hit the balance between productivity with people while also building rapport with colleagues.
 - Presence. Charismatic communicators know their cues are contagious. When they share their best, warmest, most competent self, others follow suit.
 - Preventing people problems. They encourage both trust and safety, allowing others to bring up issues before they become problems.
- They are able to quickly identify communication errors and conflicts in order to effectively solve them.
- Understanding hidden motivations and emotions. They seek to deeply understand the people on their teams and in their lives.

Find out more in Cues!

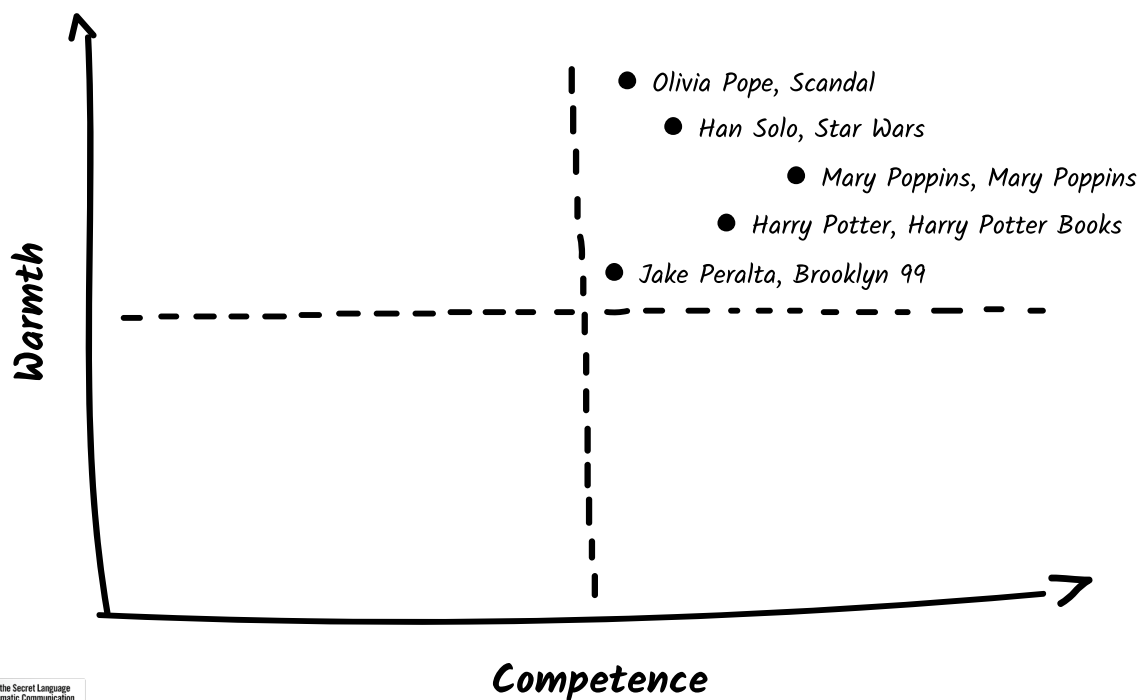

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

Charismatic Characters

Here are some examples from popular culture to help put the Charisma Scale into context.

These are characters who are likable, respected, and admired. They can get things done and be valued team players. They are usually popular and well-liked.

We added a few characters that we find highly charismatic. Add yours too!

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

Warm Communicators

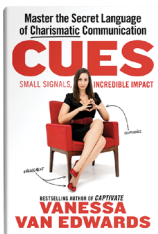

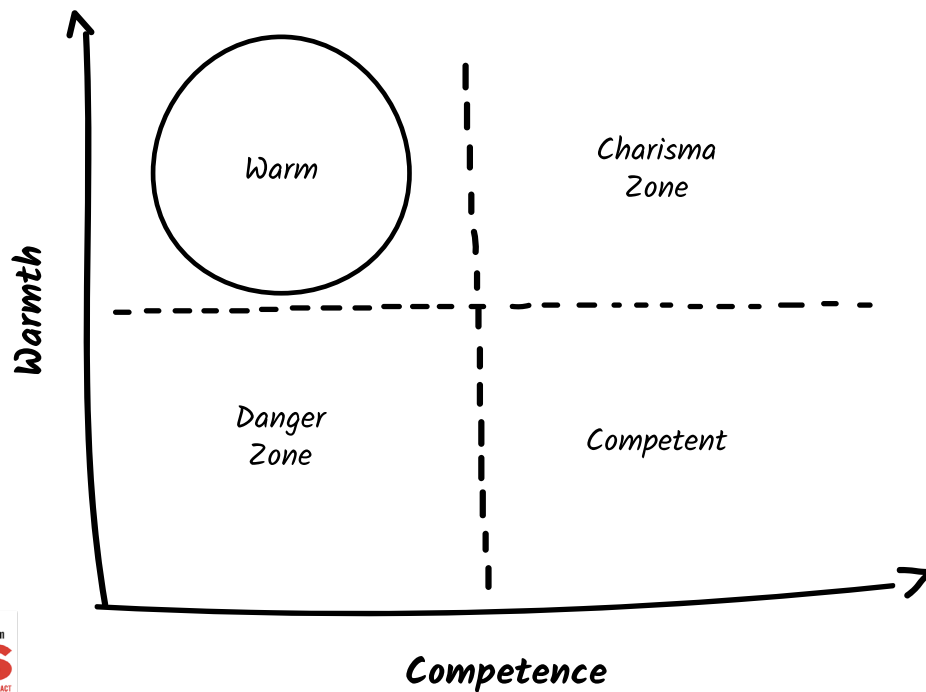

Warm communicators fall into the upper left part of the Charisma scale.

They are seen as friendly, likable, and trustworthy by others.

Strengths: Warm communicators quickly build rapport, are easy to collaborate with, and make people feel comfortable.

Struggles: They may struggle to say no or to set boundaries, for fear of disappointing others or being disliked.

Goal: Warm communicators need to purposefully increase their competence cues to move themselves to the Charisma Zone. This helps them be both liked and respected.

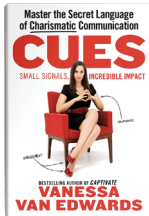

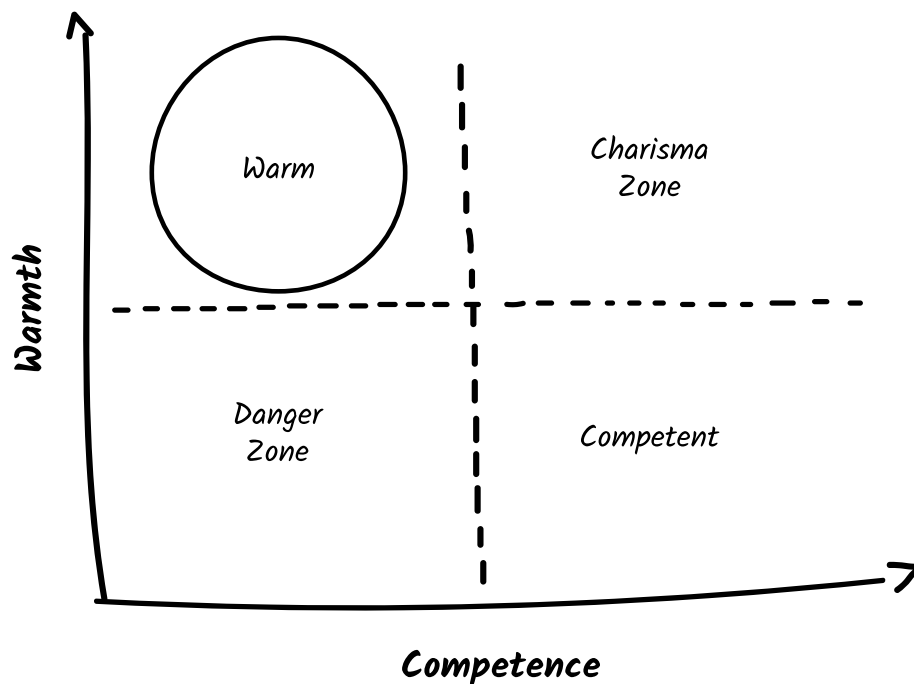

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

Warmth at Work

Warm communicators are motivated by...

- the approval of others.
- inclusion in social or casual gatherings.
- being perceived as friendly and trustworthy.
- group cohesion and team health.
- the well-being of others; they like to check in, encourage people, and to have a good idea of what is happening in everyone's lives.
- often remember birthdays, pets' names, and they even organize celebrations.

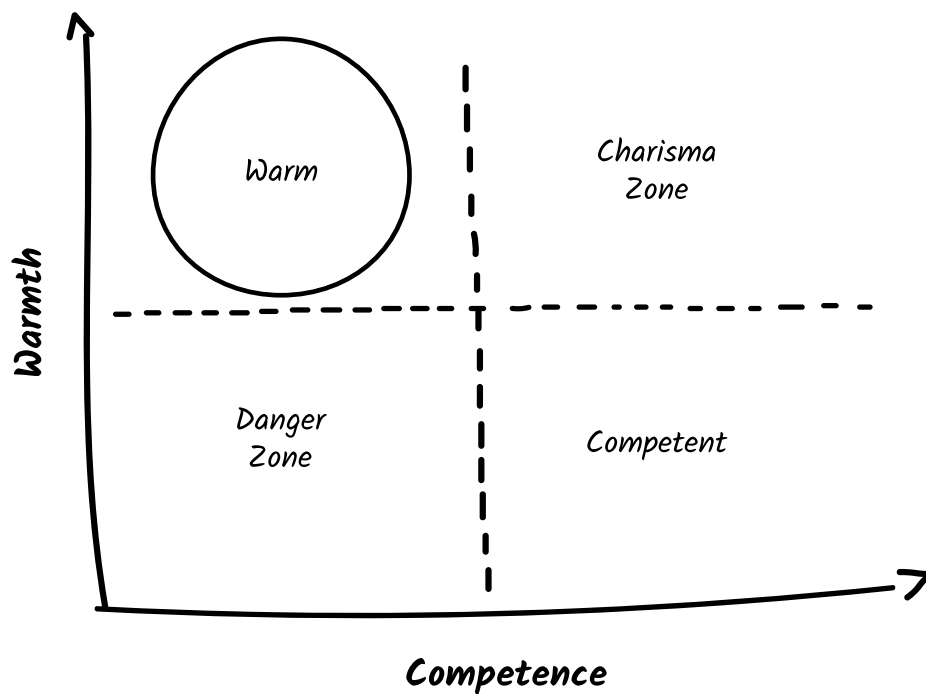

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

Warmth in Life

Warm communicators struggle with...

- setting boundaries.
- conflict or disagreements.
- taking on too much to avoid saying no and being disliked.
- over-apologizing or stating their opinions without qualifiers.
- being emotionally drained with others' problems and with issues others bring to them.
- promoting others' well-being at the sake of their own happiness and needs.

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

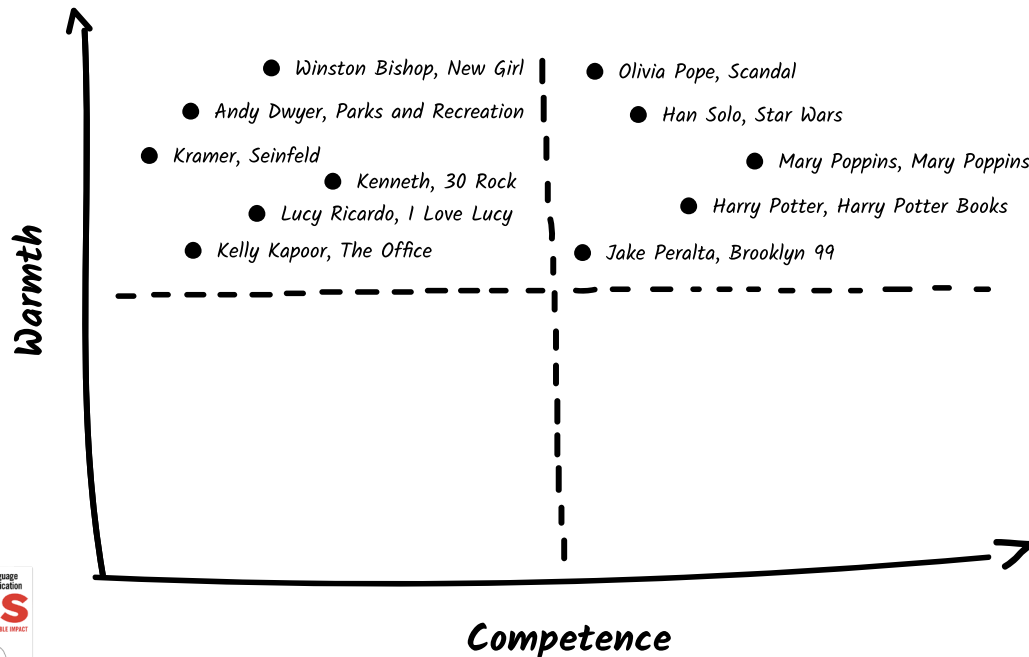

Warm Characters

Think of friendly, trustworthy, cheerful characters in TV shows, books or movies.

These characters are often friendly, warm, and inviting, but sometimes they are not taken seriously. They can be known for being silly or funny.

Place your highly warm characters or role models on the Charisma Scale.

We added a few characters that we find highly warm. Add yours too!

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

People higher in competence:

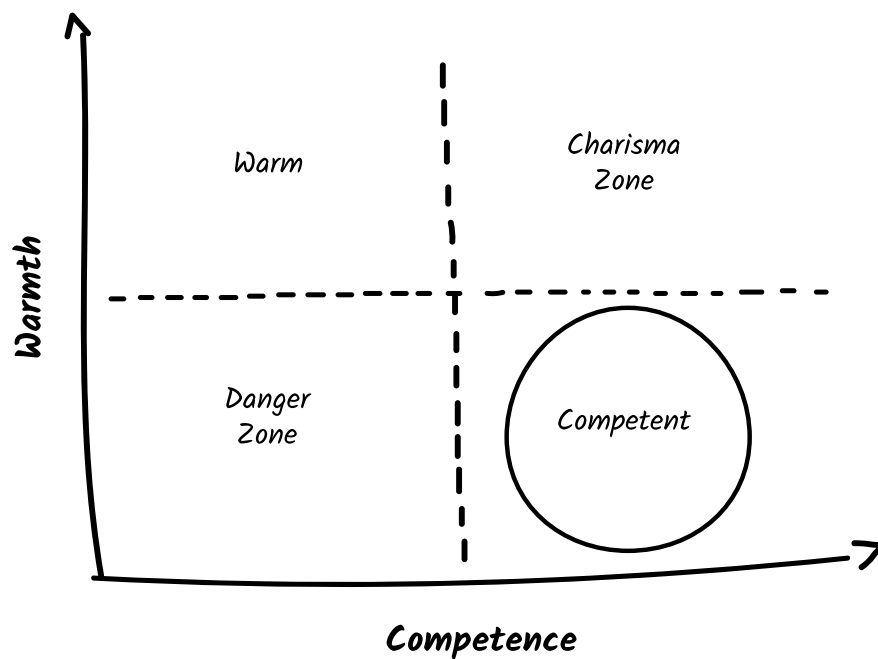

Competent communicators fall into the lower right part of the Charisma scale.

They are seen as impressive, powerful, and capable by others.

Strengths: Competent communicators are efficient, productive, and can direct and lead others.

Struggles: They might have difficulty building rapport, be considered hard to talk to, or be seen as cold or intimidating.

Goal: Competent communicators need to increase their warmth cues to move themselves into the Charisma Zone.

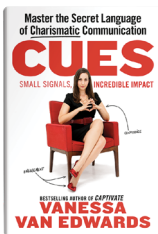

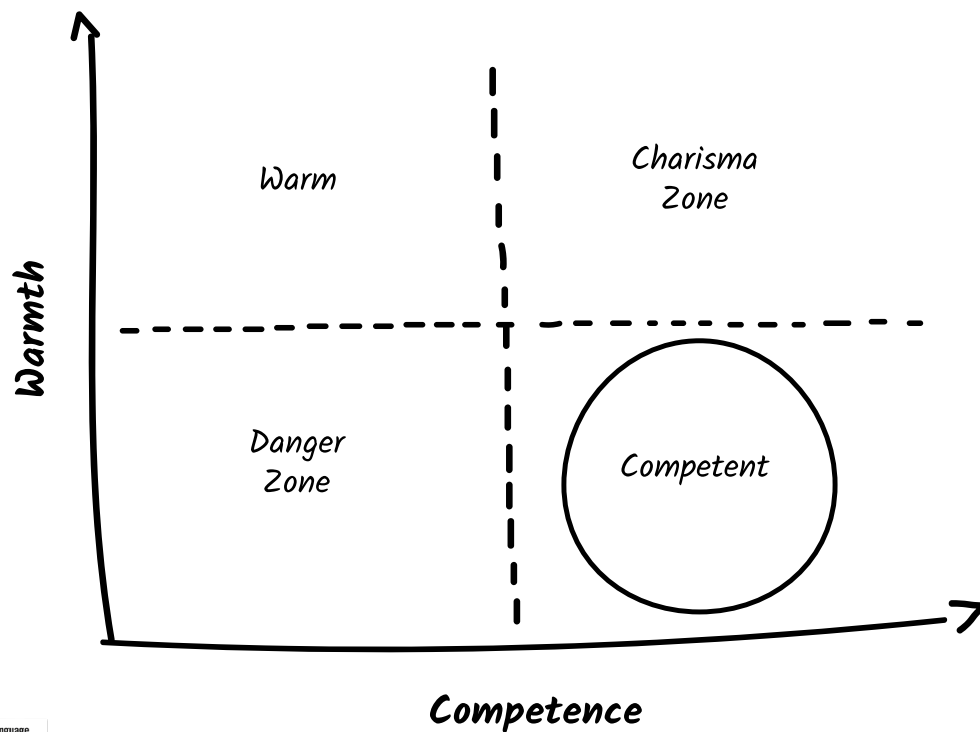

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

Competence at Work

Competent communicators are motivated by...

- the approval of others.
- having others see them as smart.
- a strong reputation; for example, they appreciate when others come to them for advice.
- being perceived as impressive and in the know.
- being heard.

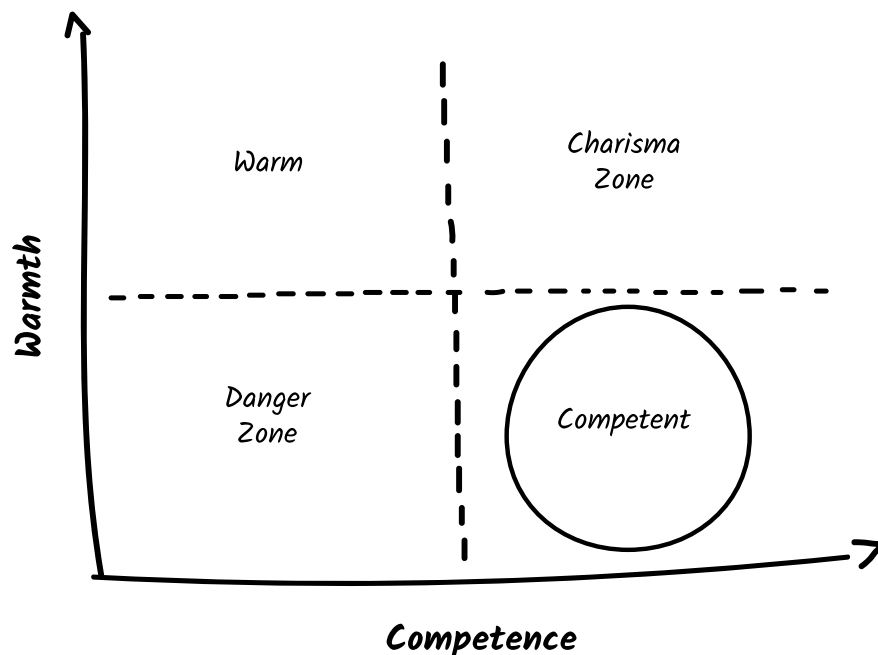

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

Competence in Life

Competent communicators struggle with...

- admitting when they don't know something.
- asking for help from others (overcoming internal pressure to want to do everything).
- being overly skeptical.
- apologizing for a mistake.
- micromanaging, since they feel they know how to do it better than others.
- frequently called on to lead.
- name dropping or bragging, using difficult vocabulary, or mentioning titles and awards.

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

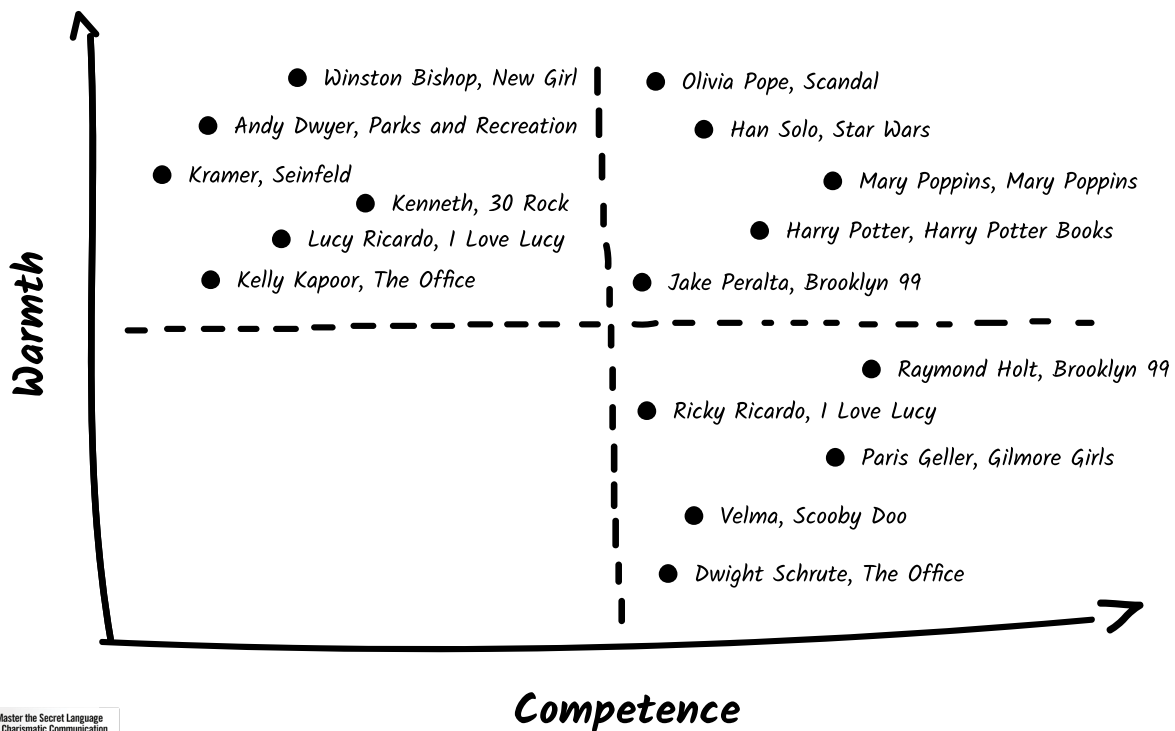

Highly Competent Characters

Think of highly competent, impressive, powerful characters in TV shows, books, or movies.

These characters are often very serious—maybe a little too serious—and known for being smart, cold, or intimidating.

Place your highly competent characters or role models on the Charisma Scale.

We added a few characters that we find highly competent. Add yours too!

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

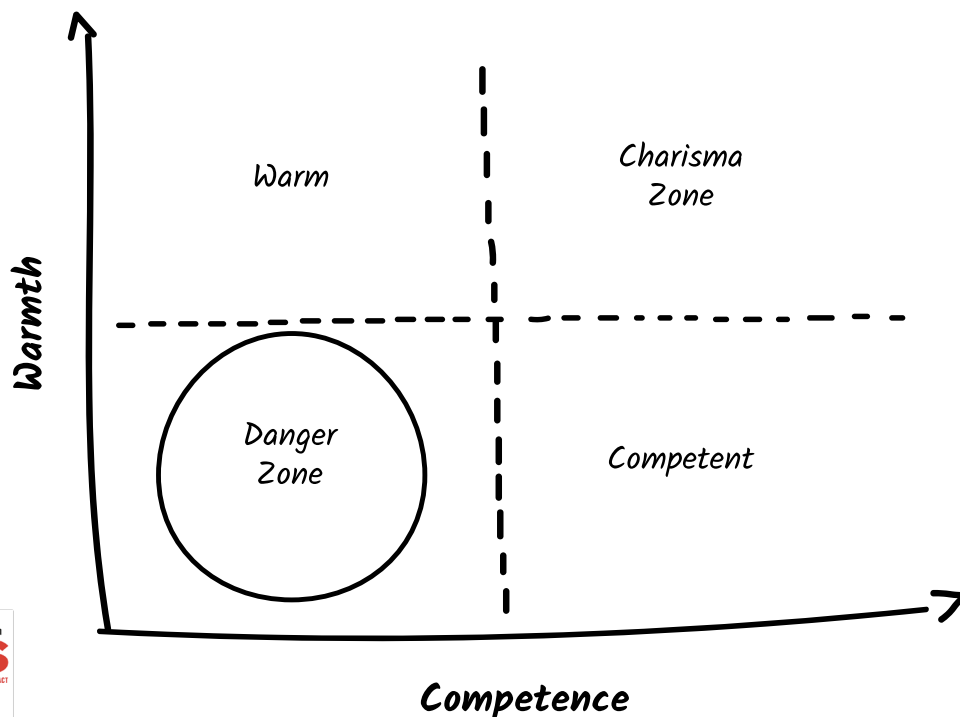

The Danger Zone

People who do not send enough of either warmth or competence communication cues fall in the Danger Zone.

Researchers find that when insufficient warmth and competence cues are used, people are more likely to be overlooked, dismissed, pitied, and undervalued.

This can sometimes stem from people masking or hiding their true feelings. This creates an under-signaling problem in relationships.

Bottom Line: People in the Danger Zone need to purposefully increase both warmth and competence cues.

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

Characters who get dismissed, ignored and underestimated

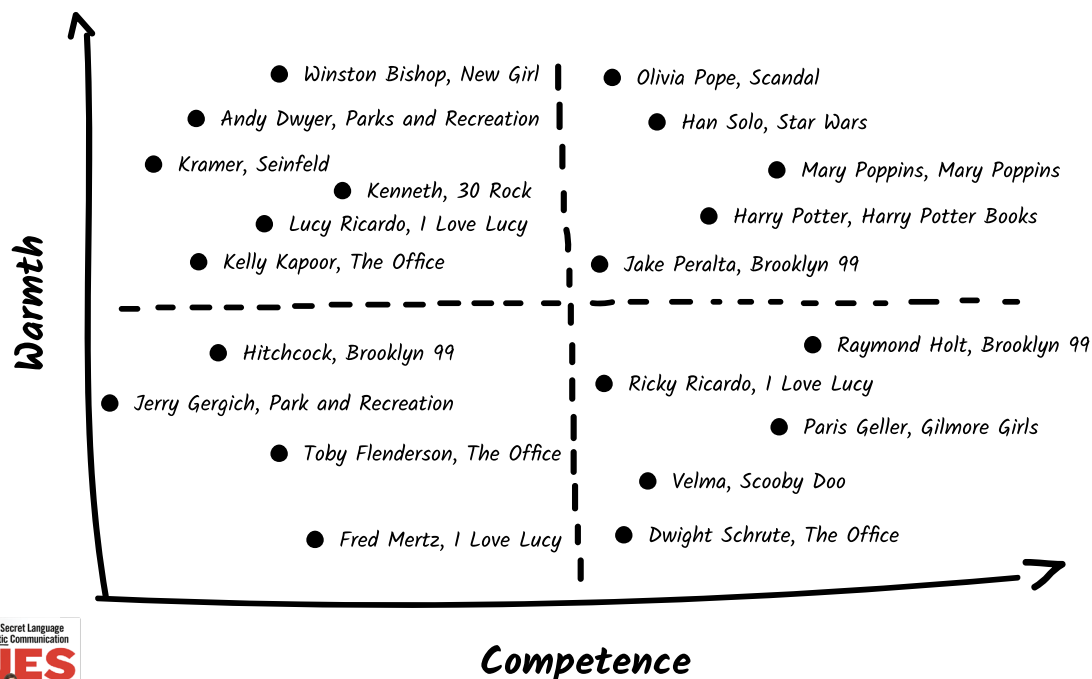

Think of TV, book or movie characters who are ignored, pitied or dismissed.

They either under signal (and are seen as stoic or boring) or signal incorrectly (and are seen as annoying and mean.)

Characters in the Danger Zone never get good opportunities, are often teased or forgotten.

Place your Danger Zone characters on the Charisma Scale.

We added a few characters that we think fall in the Danger Zone. Add yours too!

Find out more in Cues!

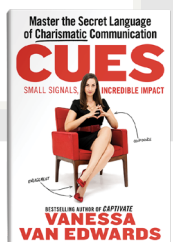

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

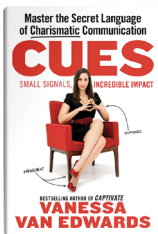

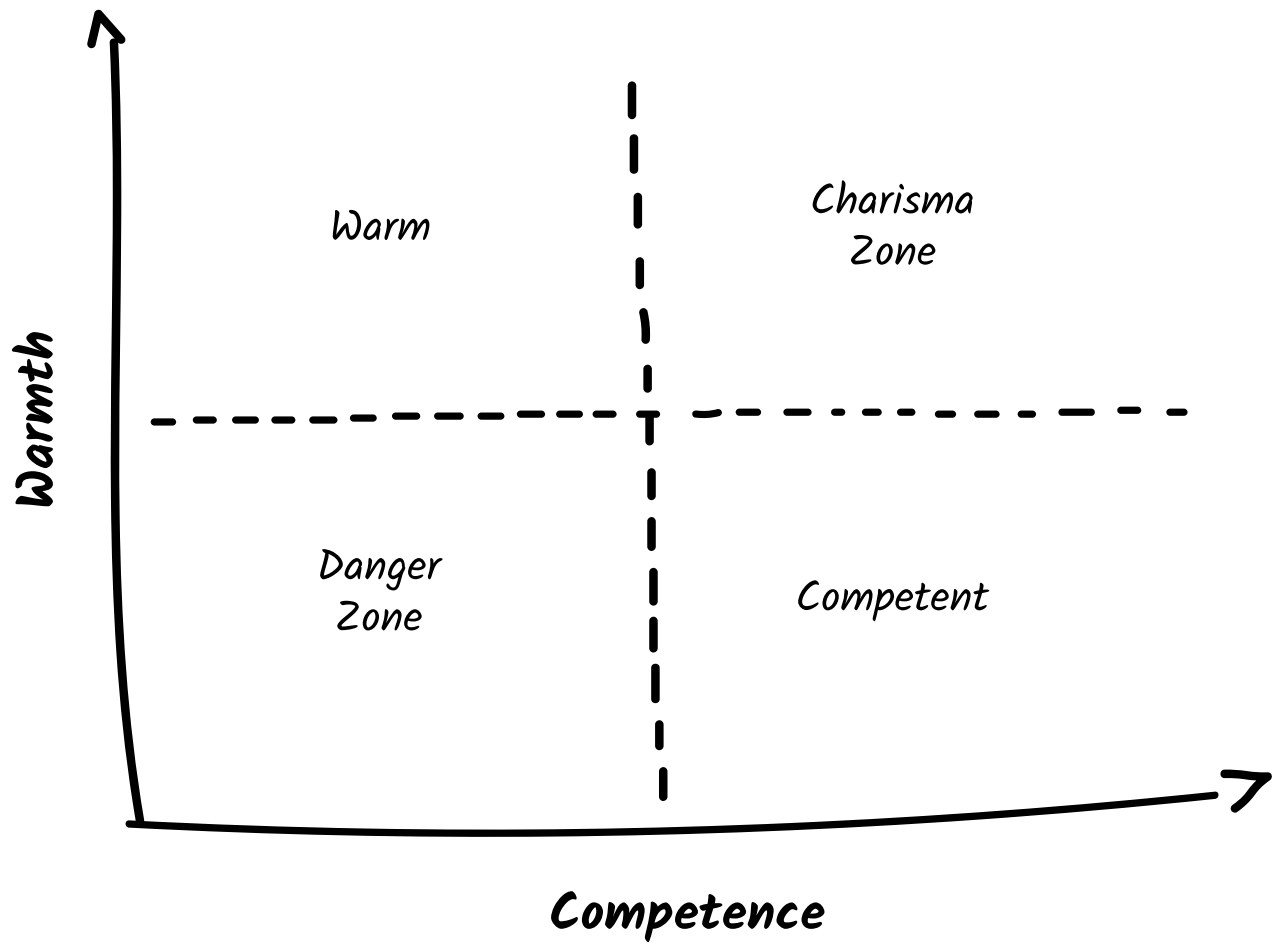

The Charisma Scale in Practice

To have your ideas heard and adopted, it helps to match the charisma style of those you communicate with.

It's likely you don't communicate in the same way as the important people in your life. Are you highly competent, but your colleagues are highly warm? It's important to get aligned with the people who matter to you.

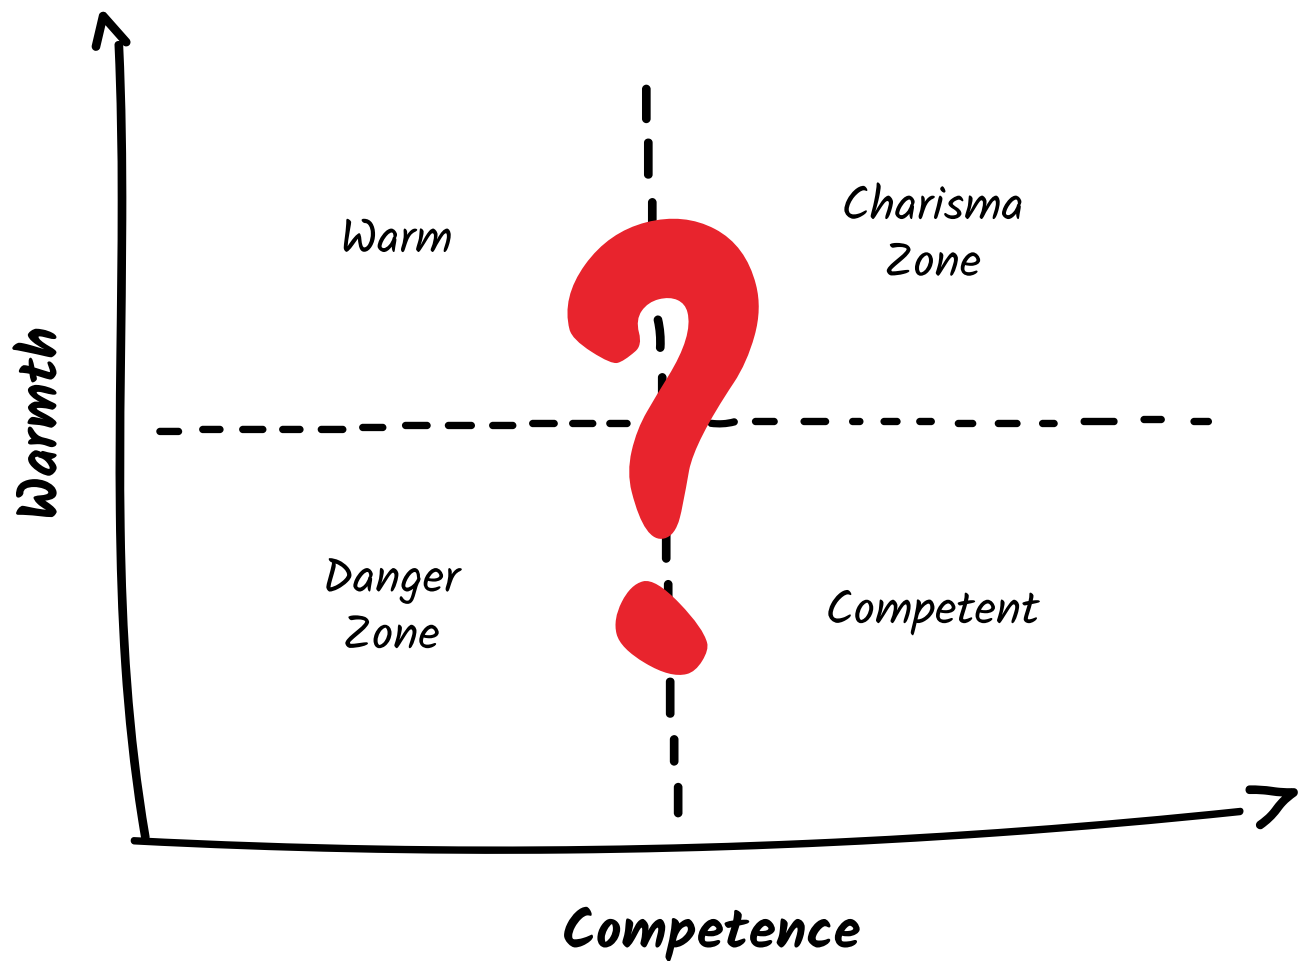

Plot those you spend regular time with, or frequently work with, on the Charisma Scale.

Find out more in Cues!

www.scienceofpeople.com/cues

Not sure where someone falls on the Charisma Scale?

Send them the Charisma Quiz!

How to Be More Charismatic

Want to learn to communicate with both warmth and competence?

Whether you are high in warmth, competence, or are accidentally in the Danger Zone, Cues can help!

In Cues: Master the Secret Language of Charismatic Communication, Vanessa Van Edwards examines the 96 nonverbal, verbal, vocal, and imagery cues of warmth and competence.

“A must-have guide to becoming an unstoppable force”

- MEL ROBBINS,
New York Times
Best Selling Author of the High 5 Habit

About Vanessa Van Edwards

Vanessa is Lead Investigator at Science of People. She is the bestselling author of Captivate: The Science of Succeeding with People, translated into 16 languages. More than 50 million people watch her engaging YouTube tutorials and TEDx Talk. Vanessa works with entrepreneurs, growing businesses, and trillion-dollar companies; and has been featured on CNN, BBC, CBS Mornings, Fast Company, Inc. Magazine, USA Today, Entrepreneur Magazine, The Today Show, and many more.

Vanessa is renowned for teaching science-backed people skills to audiences around the world including SxSW, MIT, and CES. Her groundbreaking workshops and courses have taught half a million students worldwide how to succeed in business and life by understanding the hidden dynamics of people. Vanessa's endlessly fascinated with the science of people. Her mission is to help introverts leverage their strengths, show high achievers how to activate their secret skills and teach awkward people to feel more confident. Her much anticipated new book Cues releases on March 1st, 2022. Vanessa lives in Austin, Texas with her daughter and husband of 10+ years.

